It has a simpler file format in order to save or work with it. It is easier to learn how to use Photoshop Elements than the full version of Photoshop, that's why it is one of the best alternatives to Photoshop if you are a noob. Photoshop Elements is available for Windows and Mac. Only on macOS, the first edition is free. You can always buy the full version of Photoshop if you want to. 2012 United Kingdom budget The United Kingdom budget for the 2012–13 financial year was the last of three to be presented in the Conservative–Liberal Democrat coalition government. Previously, the BBC reported that Chancellor George Osborne had won the vote to approve the budget by 312 to 296. The finance minister, George Osborne, used his March 2012 budget to set out the coalition's measures to tackle the UK's public finances, which are set to go into deficit for the first time since 2001. The Chancellor announced a spending freeze for the police and the armed forces, yet raised taxes for higher income earners, reduced the top rate of tax to 50%, and cut corporation tax, which was paid by those businesses who derived more than half their sales from the UK. Gross domestic product The Chancellor gave an advance estimate that the UK will suffer a 0.2% fall in GDP between 2011 and 2012. The Chancellor later revised this to expect a 0.5% fall, with this lower estimate coming from the independent Office for Budget Responsibility. Later that week, the Centre for Economics and Business Research said there would be a 1.7% fall in GDP. This would be the first time since the end of World War II that the country has seen a fall in GDP. In February 2012, growth in the third quarter had been revised to 0.5% from 0.6%, and was expected to continue to improve. By July 2012, it was estimated that there would be a 0.8% rise in GDP for the first half of 2012, rather than the previously expected 0.6% rise. Public spending The Chancellor announced that there would be public spending cuts of about £11.5 billion in 2012–13, £30.2 billion in 2013–14 and £18.3 billion in 2014–15. Although the welfare budget as a proportion of GDP remained constant at 3.2%, the government were also looking to reduce public spending in central government departments by 10%, and in local government by a further 2.5%. On top of these budget cuts, there were £1.4 billion to pay for an enhanced police budget and an additional 3,000 police officers to support a £9 billion investment in the NHS, through the extra £20 billion of the annual spending review. Taxes The Chancellor announced a number of changes for taxes in the budget. The government had announced plans to increase to 50% the top rate of tax from the current rate of
