A fluorescence-based procedure for efficient detection of bisphenol A in environmental waters. The method presented here utilizes luminescence quenching in a homo-dimeric ratiometric fluorescent dye as the basis for the determination of bisphenol A (BPA) in aqueous solutions at environmentally relevant concentrations. The BPA-dye conjugate is a distinct homo-dimer, in which the intrinsic fluorescence of the compound is quenched at the expense of the fluorescence from the two luciferyl moieties within the self-dimer. The concentration dependent fluorescence intensity changes, which were determined by fluorescence spectroscopy, allow determination of the concentration of BPA. An increase in the intensity of fluorescence from the BPA-dye conjugate is accompanied by a decrease in the intensity of fluorescence from the hetero-dimer, which is formed by the dye with the BPA-dye conjugate, leading to an overall quenching of the fluorescence. This method is applicable to a range of aqueous media, including sample types such as seawater, river, and tap water, and its performance is compared with that of more conventional analytical methods.
