A month after the UFC middleweight division introduced a new category, the welterweight division saw two major shakeups. And after viewing both main events on Friday, I'd say none of it was a surprise. In fact, I'd venture to say these two fights resemble nothing more than a pair of hungry young lions in the desert after weeks of droughts, and they're ready to explode. However, it was a massive blow to be taken out by a competitor like Frankie Edgar as he was headed to a title shot in 2012. All he'd done was submit Cub Swanson, and a win over the UFC champion would have put a bit of a fire under his seat. But the tables have been turned, and in a case of "Whoever beats them, wins," Nate Diaz figures to emerge as the right man at 170 pounds. In fact, he said as much Friday night. "I think I'm the No. 1 contender," he told me. "I think I'm the No. 1 in the division. I did this to get here. I'm the one that did it." See, Diaz has a hat trick in the lightweight division. He submitted then-ch

The film is so interesting and stylish, I can't wait to check it out. I really hope the remake doesn't turn into yet another rip off with another unknown director who is the next Petey shooting his first film. Is Kevin Smith directing it? LOL... Kinda unrelated, but I wanted to tell you that I love this blog and the cedar closet. Helen, I also agree with you about Jennifer's outfit. Maybe some inspiration from clothing icons like Audrey Hepburn or Coco Chanel would have been a good idea. And I disagree about her hair and makeup. Her hair is beautiful, but very natural. And the makeup is dark and somewhat dramatic, I think. I totally did a video for the house blog on June 6 570a42141b
