Flash flooding killed at least 2 people and left more than 300 missing after storms pounded large parts of Japan on Tuesday. More than 2,000 people were without power in parts of the western prefecture of Hiroshima after being hit by a powerful earthquake on Monday. The quake that triggered the quake also unleashed a sudden downpour that made streets slick. Hiroshima police said that an 81-year-old woman and a 65-year-old man were swept away by flash flooding on a busy road. The pair were in a car that hit a fallen tree and was swept into the river. Seibu Electric Co. said a little over 300 customers were still without electricity Tuesday. It said that some people were advised to stay at home. The rain, that came as a surprise to residents, has brought down trees across the region, broken windows and flooded rivers and roads. Thousands of children were in kindergarten when the quake hit around 6:50 a.m. (0550 GMT) on Monday. Some schools canceled classes, while others were evacuated. The quake was originally reported as a magnitude 5.1, but a revised magnitude of 6.1 was given by the Japan Meteorological Agency. Yoshitomi Tatsuo, one of the country's top experts on earthquakes, said the death toll could rise with search efforts still underway. The massive earthquake that struck off Japan's coast early on Monday knocked down buildings, trapped people under rubble and left a giant tsunami on the western coast. The quake followed months of warnings of a potentially catastrophic quake. The U.S. Geological Survey said it was the biggest quake ever recorded in Japan. The government says it is the fifth largest ever 570a42141b
