Multiplayer: The Renegade Tabletop Tools System allows for unlimited multiplayer use. You can have 1 or more active players at any given time, and you can have up to 8 players connected at once. Players can take turns, take their turns simultaneously, or jump in at any time. Enjoy! Quick Start Guide: All you need to do to get going is download the files, extract them, double-click the executable file, double-click the installer for the GUI, and then start the RTTS. The setup is easy, just follow the prompts and you're ready to roll! Audio Style: The audio style will fit any players' gaming style. There are options available to allow for the correct volume to be used, or you can choose not to play music at all. Music options include options to choose music that is user-generated or part of the application's music track. Statistics: Stats are in the form of graphs and are displayed on a 2-axis graph. To move the graph, simply click on it to move it around the graph. The graph is also functional. Simply click the graph to enable it to display all of its values, including the ability to calculate and display the area, the center of the graph, and the width and height of the graph. Orthographic Maps: If you want an even more detailed representation of the world, then we have Orthographic Maps. These displays are exactly as their name suggests; they actually show the world from a point above it, like an eye looking down on the world. Exploding Cylinders: If you want even more detail, the exploding cylinders will do it. These have been in the RTTS for a very long time and have been used in many contexts. They can provide you an incredibly detailed 3D representation of a map, which can greatly enhance any RPG experience. Categorical Display: I know that I have said this before, but this is very important and should not be ignored. Sometimes you need to quickly look at values, and it's just not convenient to use text or values in tables. The category display makes for an incredibly quick and easy way to view values. Simply click the category, then click on the + or - number to bring up the value the category represents, making it easy to see what an value really means. Multiple Series: Sometimes you want more than one series on a chart to view different data. Short Story His face glowing with warmth, the young man's eyes flashed as he spoke, his words so fresh and youthful. "I, who am now the king of Avallon is but a boy! I would willingly give my life for the truth! All I ask is that you admit the truth of the matter. Lord Claude has served my family for many generations. Something is amiss." Unable to meet his gaze the king turned back to the table without answering. "You must know!" the young man urged. "Now that you are my king you have the power to compel others to do what is right!" Pressing his hands to his stomach as if to calm his nervous heart, King Marco answered slowly, "It is true that I owe you a great debt. And I am delighted that you have sought me out," he lied. "Unfortunately, in this region news rarely travels except from castle to castle. Only recently have we heard that Lord Claude has disappeared. And I am also glad that you have sought me to compliment me on my speech at my last victory. However, this special task I have set you was not given to you because I wanted to hear you speak." The boy was out of his seat, but he did not move to approach the king until King Marco motioned him to do so. The young man stood and was at once in the king's face. "We are not opposed to war! It is your safety we demand. Let Lord Claude show himself to his men!" "It is not my safety that I am concerned about, young man," King Marco replied calmly. "If Lord Claude has done me harm I will seek him down, but I cannot force those who know and fear your father to follow him." He turned away and nodded to a soldier who approached. "You will see Lord Claude and give his men the orders we have discussed." Turning back to the boy King Marco could see the anger clear on his handsome face. Marco did not mind responding to that emotion. "If what you say is true your father would have no need of mine or the attention I hold," he said. "He may be able to rule far away and not bother anyone!" Turning away he gazed upon the wolf that was now watching him with an

I wish to avoid having to rewrite all of the application code and DB migration. Thus, I am trying to build a wrapper in the form of a class to wrap my CakePHP/MySQL application and do the work for me in a dynamic manner. I plan to develop the DB migration functionality in the wrapper. The issue I'm running into is that the actual DB schema changes slightly depending on the feature being implemented in any given project. In particular I have a user schema and a project schema. Projects may have_many users, but users do not have a has_many relationship with projects. Additionally, if a project does have_many users, there is a project_users table that holds the users_id, project_id, and user_id. In the wrapper I need to know: The version of DB in the DB instance The version of cake in the CakePHP instance This should be relatively easy given that I will be using PHP to control the application and then using reflection to find the appropriate table schema and query the DB to do the right thing. However, my reflection knowledge is relatively limited and I was wondering if there is a more preferred way of doing this kind of thing that would be much easier or more practical to implement for the common case of updating the DB schema. Thanks for the help. A: Here's a pattern that's used in some frameworks, and works with a lot of dynamic update scenarios. It's dynamic in the sense that it is scripted out by hand, without needing reflection. $dbSchema = array('schema' => array('name' => 'name_of_db', 'connection
