Wow, what a unique opportunity it was for this week's HIA program. A 3-hour hand-on workshop from well known consultant, Piers Scott, brought together local companies who were hoping for an added edge for their business. Piers set the scene; explaining why automation was at the top of the agenda and how it all started. An introduction to the increased pressures on companies, the shrinking workforce, the rising cost of living and the top global challenges in the workplace, such as digital transformation, automation and the digital world was the set-up for this engaging HIA program. On Day 1: Piers went into the minds of the bosses, explaining why the people in the boardroom are so important. They are your ambassadors. They are the link between the business and the real world. Through their actions, they drive your business forward. On Day 2: Piers spoke about the impact the digital transformation and the rise of bots has had on businesses. The skills gap is at its worse in this industry today, as the roles that people take on have changed. We have moved away from getting people to do an individual job to having them help support all the other jobs that are going on at the same time. We asked Piers if he thought it was the right move from a business point of view. As we have become more connected, we have lost the ability to communicate. We have lost the time when people read the same books and watch the same movies. People can just google it. How does e79caf774b
