torrent. Prevalence of antibodies against hepatitis C virus among pregnant women: a meta-analysis. Hepatitis C virus (HCV) infection is an important cause of morbidity and mortality. The aim of the present meta-analysis was to determine the prevalence of HCV infection among pregnant women. Data were retrieved from the PubMed, Medline, ScienceDirect, Scopus, and Google Scholar databases up to and including 2013. We identified 25 independent eligible studies and included the data of 81,702 pregnant women in the meta-analysis. The overall pooled proportion of HCV infection among pregnant women was 0.95 (95%CI=0.94-0.97). HCV infection is a major issue in the pregnant women. Moreover, infection due to HCV is as high in developing countries as it is in industrialized ones.

In addition, a detailed look at the geographical heterogeneity revealed that HCV prevalence was inversely associated with latitude. However, women aged  $\leq 20$  years had higher rate of HCV infection. Pregnant women with low socioeconomic status and injecting drug users had the highest rate of infection. The current meta-analysis highlighted the importance of HCV infection among pregnant women and its consequences on their own health and on the well-being of their fetuses and newborns. In addition, although developed countries have been facing the problem for several years now, developing countries are faced with this problem at its very inception. Validity and reliability of a Finnish version of the self-report questionnaire for assessing quality of life in patients with chronic obstructive pulmonary disease. To translate and validate a Finnish version of the King's Health Questionnaire (KHQ) for assessing quality of life in patients with chronic obstructive pulmonary disease (COPD). In a validation study, 40 Finnish patients with COPD filled out three scales of the KHQ, the Short Form-36 Health Survey (SF-36), and the St. George Respiratory Questionnaire (SGRQ). The questionnaires were administered
