Gameplay Frequently Asked Questions: Q: Can you customize your character? A: Yes, the appearance of your character can be customized. You can freely combine the weapons, armor, and magic that you equip. You can develop your character according to your play style, such as increasing your muscle strength to become a strong warrior, or mastering magic. Q: What's the difference between a warrior and an archer? A: Warriors can fight efficiently with their weapon attacks, thus focusing on single-target attacks. Archers can fight with the help of a bow, thus having two types of attacks, for example, for nearby targets and for far away targets. There is also a difference between a light warrior and a heavy warrior. Light warriors can easily move, and easily use defensive skills, but they can attack at a slow speed. Heavy warriors can take out enemies faster, but they have less agility and are slow to move. Q: In what way do you improve the skills and attributes of your characters? A: In the Dark Age of Ages, you can improve the stats of your characters by training them. Training characters consists of three parts. First, you need to refine the skills of the characters. A man has been haunted by his past for a decade. He possesses no memories save a single, tragic image: that of his death in the woods. Losing himself through normality, he had lost his way...

In But What Was I Thinking?!, author Darkmind_82 invites us to join Hellslinger in his time of torment. The story begins with Hellslinger locked within a situation that he is pretty comfortable with. For 10 years he has kept to himself, using his dog-like demeanor, voice, and style to hide his identity. However, one moment changes everything. On his way to meet her spouse for a business meeting, Hellslinger's demeanor shifts after an experience he had. Unable to recall his old self, Hellslinger begins to search for answers to a predicament that only exists in his mind.

Following the mystery that unfolds in this book, we are on the lookout for other tales from the same author. They are self-contained stories that delve into the ever-bizarre mind of Darkmind_82.

A story in the New York Times by an apparently quite thoughtful liberal columnist Jennifer Pozner (can we trust anything she writes?) had a rather odd opening on its face. It started with a recitation of the "uninspiring," "flawed" and "unreliable" polls by which the "ideological biases" of pollsters "trend to disguise the true opinions of the public."

But then it was clear that Ms. Pozner was much more concerned with her own biases than with her pollsters', for she went on to write: "We know that one of the most significant internal, psychological factors keeping some women from electing a male president is sexism." And then: "White men remain a potent force in American politics, possibly more so than women." After making the case that women are politically "sensible and pragmatic" and "taking on traditional male-dominated political roles in government," Ms. Pozner makes her claim that "the sexism issue is a powerful one for Republican women. For women who are already primed to hear female voices, the message from their party is that women are dishonest, petty, bigoted, dishonest." But you don't need a poll or a pollster to be "primed" with that message, or to know what messages count as "traditional" or "female." It should be clear that such messages are at the core of all forms of sexism. That's why we should not be hesitant to speak of sexism. Now you'd think that Ms. Pozner would be a bit more careful about generalizations about men. She herself seems to have "primed" her with the idea that men are in some ways different from women in their (i.e., her) political judgments and would have a special interest in reading into any opinion polls of the electorate the men's own political preferences. That said, I can see why a woman political leader might be sensitive to such sexism, and how that could explain her comments. A reader's email brought to my attention a piece written by someone named Sally Young for the political analysis journal Publius. She suggests that sexism is one of a variety of "factors" - think "intersectional"
