FIFA 22 introduces “HyperMotion Technology,” which uses motion capture data collected from 22 real-life players playing a complete, high-intensity football match in motion capture suits. The data collected from player movements, tackles, aerial duels and on-ball actions is used to power FIFA 22 gameplay. 22-player motion capture suits from 22 real-life footballers will also be used for post-match analysis with an aim to better understand the physical intensity of football matches, including overuse injuries, and injuries and performances. The larger than life FIFA 22 player models were also unveiled last week during a livestream that featured real-life players such as David Beckham and Philippe Coutinho. A few more player models will be unveiled in the coming weeks. FIFA was released in October for Xbox One and PC. One of the major features in the game is the return of last year’s popular FIFA Ultimate Team mode. With FIFA Ultimate Team, players can build their own squads to compete in real-life leagues. EA Sports plans to release more specific details about FIFA Ultimate Team in the upcoming weeks. “Never before has there been a title that so fully represents our commitment to creating a truly authentic soccer experience. It’s a leap forward for our franchise, and we can’t wait for fans to get their hands on it,” said Grant Morris, Vice President, Professional at EA Sports. “The fidelity and gameplay enhancements in FIFA 22 have been achieved through unprecedented collaboration with the world’s elite football stars. I think fans can expect to see a whole new, evolved way to play the game with HyperMotion.” “The response to the Real Player Motion technology in FIFA has been incredible. Getting the message out to fans around the world to put on a motion capture suit has been great fun,” added Thomas Kristensen, Creative Director, FIFA. “Our new player models are a really big step forward for the franchise, and we’re looking forward to bringing even more of the players' striking ability and individuality to life.” Check out a video of FIFA 22 gameplay below.
