They're like the foundation upon which you build a photo, whether it's adjusting colors, applying special effects, or creating a collage. You can create layers in Photoshop CC, CS6, or CS5. They're the blue bubbles you see all over a photo when you look at it through a layer mask (as shown in Figure 7-2 and the layer \(left\) pop-up menu \(right\).")). You can use them to change the way your image looks before you export it. When you're ready to save your photo, you can either send the entire image to the web, export the image to use in a website, or create your own PDF document. The layers in your document can vary as you edit. You can create layers that affect only one part of the image, or you can use layers as a way to control the entire image. Figure 7-2. Q: Django JsonResponse fails to handle Unicode strings while Response.ok() works correctly I have an AJAX request I have been struggling with. The request sends a JSON string which contains a Unicode character. If I turn on debug mode I can see that the Unicode string contains the correct characters. However, when I call jsonResponse.ok(), I get the following error: UnicodeEncodeError at /ajax_test/ 'ascii' codec can't encode character u'\xe2' in position 0: ordinal not in range(128) What's going on here? The string is unicode and it's displaying properly in the debugger. Why won't jsonResponse.ok() handle the Unicode strings correctly? Here is the AJAX request method: @login_required @require_post def ajax_test(request, id): return HttpResponse("{'type': 'json'}") Here is my view: @method_decorator(login_required, name='dispatch') class AjaxHomeView(ListView): model = User template_name = 'index.html' page_title = _('User Center') def get_context_data(self, kwargs): context = super(AjaxHomeView, self).get_context_data(kwargs) print('check %r' % context) context['data'] = self.model.objects.all() context['total_pages'] = User.objects.all().count() context['page'] = self.request.GET.get('page', 1) context['table_columns'] = ['id', 'name', 'last_login', 'last_ip',] return context

March 7, 2015. From the doctor's office, and everywhere else, the subject of the report card for the first quarter of 2015-16 has just about everything: better or worse, more or less. Here, after polling the editors of the newspaper's sister publications, we offer them a sneak preview of the upcoming quarter's reading lists, instead. Here at the newspaper, we'd like to see more of the following written and performed, and fewer of the following, even though it's not a bad thing to have a career in show business. This part of the report card is by no means an exhaustive list and is meant to give you a starting point, and steer clear of anything pertaining to the political and social sciences. Remember when your job was to go out and get another job and raise another little person and do your best to make sure his life wasn't like yours? Today, and every day, it's all reversed. The world is your oyster. There's never enough time in the day, never enough time off. You are the one with the most important job in the world. Except you aren't. You're just a guy with a cable channel. That's what we are. We're just a guy with a cable channel, and I think that's what makes us sad. All the people talking about ethics and values, and using the exact same old tired sermonal language to tell you what you should do and what you can't do, and what you'll have to give up because you decided it was too good to be true. It's a soft job. You can do all the sports and entertainment you want. You can make a movie or a hit show or a rap video or a rap song and make all that garbage that moves people. You can make it pay. You can make you millions. That's what you do, isn't it? And now it's just a job. It's your job. That's what you do. It's just your job. You know what you say when you get to the end of your career and you realize you haven't done anything that's special? It's okay. That's what you do. 2.
