```
``` And, then, we check the content of the Word file, which begins with the simple line ```SheepTags. This is a simple way to do what you wish with a text. ``` {,python language="Python"} word_data = r"C:\Users\sam\Desktop\salmond.docx" words = wordpad_load(word_data) for word in words: for sentence in word: for tag in word: if tag in word and 'SheepTags' in sentence: print(word) ``` ## Find Word Document Tags Tags are a great way to find the words that you are looking for and you can use different types of characters to tag your text. In the above example, we used a single character, `{}`, to tag our text. Let's assume we want to build the content of the text document using words that contain the characters `yamun` and `bangladesh`; this can be done using the `any()` function. We can use this in a loop until the words are exhausted, where we want to print the words if they contain either of these characters. ``` {,python language="Python"} from itertools import product for word in product('yamun','bangladesh'): print(word) ``` Another approach would be to use the `not` function, as below: ``` {,python language="Python"} for word in product('yamun','bangladesh'): print(word) ``` # Save Word Document While this Python script will definitely work, it is very simple. The question, however, is: how can we perform the same task using a much more advanced operation? Save the Python script we have just written by clicking the .py button and save the file as `letter_check.py` with Python as the file extension. Now change the Python script as shown below. ``` {,python language="Python"} from itertools import product filename = "C:\Users\sam\`
