EA SPORTS FIFA is the official videogame of the FIFA videogame series. It is the world's foremost videogame sports title, complete with authentic football gameplay, millions of in-game players and three distinct game modes: Tournament, Career and Online. EA SPORTS FIFA is only released in late June in most territories. FIFA 14 has led to a record-breaking season, with over 15 million sold units. Online: FIFA Ultimate Team (FUT) Synchronized with the core game, FIFA Ultimate Team (FUT) features a club management system in which players can be built, nurtured and traded at their leisure. In addition to contributing towards the Club and League total, players can purchase FUT packs to boost their team with all manner of premium content. This content is locked inside packs that can be purchased in-game, or in a post-release addition to the game, the FUT World Cup Edition, available in August. FUT is primarily powered by real user behaviour. Players interact and communicate online with the FIFA community, leaving feedback that helps make FUT better. In addition, players' performances are factored in to the FUT rating system. If the world of football were a democracy, FUT would be voting for its greatest players. The Club Manager - Career Mode In Career mode, players are put in charge of their very own club, working with an entirely fictional set of players, rather than the familiar squad of last year. The player's training, tactics, formations and starting line-up are important decision points in Career mode. The game's added variables - such as the size of a new stadium or squad, the opponents' tactical preferences or the weather conditions - also impact on gameplay. Players can retire, and one season can be played in its entirety, though returning to later years can also be a central part of a player's career. The tournament - Tournament Mode The season is the central hub of FIFA. Every week, EA SPORTS FIFA tournaments are held all over the world. At these tournaments, players in the thousands can participate in real-time matches - with rewards, victory points, challenges and the chance to prove themselves in front of the global audience. Also on offer in-game are weekly Club Friendly matches and Player Pass invites. To give players the best chance of making it into the top 100, Club Friendly matches are regularly held, to help put bc9d6d6daa
