A case of bleeding from a giant arteriovenous malformation (AVM) is presented in which the characteristic signs of hereditary hemorrhagic telangiectasia (HHT) were noted during induction of anaesthesia. It was uncertain whether these were associated with a deteriorating response to pre-induction anaesthetic agents or whether they were associated with the effect of the drugs. In this case study we investigated the effects of isoflurane and nitrous oxide on the cerebral circulation during induction of anaesthesia in a patient with HHT. We have also reviewed the current literature on the effects of anaesthetics in patients with HHT.Race/ethnicity and socioeconomic status in pediatric end-stage kidney disease and chronic kidney disease. Most epidemiologic research has focused on the contribution of race/ethnicity and socioeconomic status (SES) to outcomes in end-stage kidney disease (ESKD) and chronic kidney disease (CKD). We compared characteristics of children with ESKD to CKD, and specifically to those with only ESKD. Multivariable logistic regression was used to compare the characteristics of 2150 patients identified as having only ESKD (n = 1304), CKD (n = 847), and ESKD and CKD (n = 371) from the 1998
