What is the best way to generate a count of selected items in my query? For example, say I want the quantity of all items selected. select COUNT(*) FROM MYTABLE I would like to have a second column in my result set, showing the amount of rows selected. Something like this: | itemid | quantity | ----- | 1 | 3 | | 2 | 5 | | 3 | 4 | I'm using Oracle 11g A: You don't need the explicit count, just a group by: select t.*, count(*) from mytable t group by t.itemid You can put the count in a subquery to get an extra column, but there's little point doing so. Q: Aligned matrix transpose with template magic I have looked at the other questions about aligned matrix-transpose and I have the code below that gives me no errors but I don't know if the code is valid (the size is a template parameter) template struct type { typedef int t[n]; }; template struct transpose { typedef typename type::t row[M]; }; template struct transpose_overload { typedef typename transpose::row row[M]; }; template struct transpose_overload { typedef typename transpose::row row[M]; }; int main() { cout << t[1][2]; typedef transpose_overload::row row[2]; int a[2][1
