finally, use strong passwords. this isnt just a good security practice, its also a good password management practice. strong passwords contain a mix of uppercase and lowercase letters, numbers and symbols. they should never be dictionary words, or words found on an internet search engine. you can generate strong passwords with a password manager. you can also generate strong passwords on the fly. this way you can automatically create and use new passwords for any website or app. if youre an internet service provider (isp), you can leverage a password manager to make it easier for your customers to generate and use strong passwords. you can also offer them strong passwords through email. for example, you can send them an email with a link to their password manager, asking them to generate and use a strong password. this way, the customer is using a strong password while signing up and the isp is using a strong password to verify their account. if youre a business, you can utilize a password manager to create strong passwords for all your customers. this way, even if a hacker breaks into your system, they still wont be able to use your customers passwords. you can also utilize a password manager for your employees, so that you can create and use their passwords. this way, if an employee is compromised, all your accounts are still safe. use of a federation protocol as described in sp 800-63c, section 5 to connect the csp and rp, special considerations apply to session management and reauthentication. the federation protocol communicates an authentication event between the csp and the rp but establishes no session between them. since the csp and rp often employ separate session management technologies, there shall not be any assumption of correlation between these sessions. consequently, when an rp session expires and the rp requires reauthentication, it is entirely possible that the session at the csp has not expired and that a new assertion could be generated from this session at the csp without reauthenticating the user.

if the proposed action will have a significant impact on an endangered or threatened species, the agency will consult under the endangered species act of 1973, as amended, to develop a biological opinion that assesses the impact of the proposed action on the species. the biological opinion would also include reasonable and prudent measures, or alternative actions, that would avoid or minimize any impacts to listed species. windows server security center helps prevent data loss by providing a single point of management for security. it provides effective data loss prevention that works across endpoints, using automated policy and detection logic for, for example, mail retention policies, on-premises exchange, and the windows file protection mechanisms to help keep data safe and out of reach for cybercriminals. as a result, windows server security center can prevent data loss by disabling client devices that don't meet security criteria. in this chapter, we discuss the various third-party software products that you can use to secure e-mail traffic, including a spam filter, a virus scanner, a bandwidth monitor, and a disk monitoring solution. e-mail traffic is protected at the transport layer by the common use of secure socket layer (ssl) for e-mail transmission. the transport layer security (tls) protocol is built on top of the ssl protocol to improve encryption and to prevent data modification during transit. the client configuration process for secure sockets layer (ssl) and the transport layer security (tls) is in most cases self-explanatory, but each requires its own configuration settings.
