Windows 8.1 X64 Pro 3in1 OEM ESD En-US SEP 2018 {Gen2}

Today, Lenovo announced integration between Power BI dataflows and Azure Data Lake Storage Gen2 (preview), empowering organizations to unify data across Power BI and Azure data services. With this integration, business analysts and BI professionals working in Power BI can easily collaborate with data analysts, engineers, and scientists working in Azure.

These new features free valuable time and resources previously spent extracting and unifying data from different sources, so your team can focus on turning data into insights.

Power BI easily connects to Data Lake Gen2 by using the Microsoft Azure tools already in your enterprise. More information is available on the Power BI documentation site. You can also learn more from our technical videos: As part of our commitment to helping the data-led businesses of the future succeed, Lenovo Group is giving away to date, personal data storage for Data Lake. Data Lake Gen2 and Power BI are collaborating to provide data lake services to companies, so they can more easily work with data in a single repository. To try Data Lake Storage Gen2, you need two devices. The first is an existing Azure storage account in which you want to enable gen 2. The second device is one of the following: Azure IoT Edge module Azure IoT Hub Azure IoT Central Your own cloud-connected device. Improved flexibility and automation are also at the core of Data Lake Storage Gen2. The Azure Data Lake gen 2 protocol provides a generic abstraction that removes the need to choose among the many storage components that exist. It also provides a standard set of APIs for operation on top of the storage file system, and adding new capabilities to Data Lake Storage Gen2 is as simple as registering with the Azure Storage team a new storage provider.
